Dr. Lori Flint is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Curriculum & Instruction at East Carolina University. Teaching both graduate and undergraduate students, she holds her doctorate from The University of Georgia in Educational Psychology/Gifted & Creative Education, and Master of Education from Ashland University in Talent Development. Dr. Flint serves on the boards of several national and local organizations related to improving schools and student experiences in them. An active advocate for children at the local, state, and national levels, she has experience teaching and parenting gifted and creative children and adults, understanding their needs from birth through adulthood. Research interests include those related to increasing student achievement and motivation, especially through the specific teaching of skills needed for school and real-life survival; gender; social and emotional areas; and individual differences such as gifted students with learning disabilities. Correspondence may be addressed to: Lori J. Flint, Department of Curriculum & Instruction, Speight 119, College of Education, East Carolina University, Greenville, NC 27858. Email: FlintL@ecu.edu

Dr. Matthew Makel is a Gifted Education Research Specialist for the Duke University Talent Identification Program. He received his Ph.D. in Educational Psychology from Indiana University, his M.A. in Developmental Psychology from Cornell University, and his B.A. in Psychology from Duke University. His research interests include measuring the effects of the gifted identification process on student beliefs and behaviors as well as understanding how a person’s implicit beliefs about giftedness or creativity influence their performance. Correspondence may be addressed to: Matthew C. Makel, Duke University Talent Identification Program, 1121 West Main Street, Durham, NC 27701. Email: mmakel@tip.duke.edu

Dr. Pam Shue completed her doctoral studies at Temple University in Philadelphia. After her studies she accepted a position as a research associate at the Family, Infant, and Preschool Program and then became a principal of a charter school. Currently she is an assistant professor in the department of Special Education and Child Development at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. Her interests and research involve early childhood educational practices, literacy development with English and non-English language learners, preschool policy, and inclusion practices. Correspondence may be addressed to: Pamela L. Shue, Department of Special Education and Child Development, University of North Carolina at Charlotte, 9201 University City Boulevard, Charlotte, NC 28223. Email: Pamela.Shue@uncc.edu
