There is No Water

no slick-red steel pressed against the aorta with enough pressure to Listen to often I wake in the night burning because your shirt is open one inch

I know it is a boy who curls the hair ‘round your ear does he hear sound of chitin shells five thousand insects bursting against the earth

no bodies (nothing) open the husk in my throat my warm dry hand (if only it were wet sand) does not endure only burns and blossoms into dust
A Letter to Ria

in my dreams, I am crawling between the teeth you never show.

somewhere else,
you are watching a movie I have not seen.

I want to tell you these things, that I do not understand your childhood of broken sticks, that I would like to try.

I want to tell you that I am always being forgotten, that I am full of ghosts, that the child they took out of her looked like a white bean in a blood-filled jar. she told me this. they wouldn’t let me in the room.

I want to tell you that I am not good at confession, that I am a circus ape, hands fluttering like an injured bird, trying to explain to you with this empty gimmick, in unnatural language, how to understand the space that inhabits us.

About the Author

Sery Bounphasaysonh was born in Laos, but has lived most of his life in the United States. He is new to publishing, but not new to writing which he has been working on sporadically for well over a decade. He is a member of monthly writing workshop group that he originally organized in 2004. He currently lives and works in Massachusetts where he runs a small, but growing family business.
