From the Reference Desk

Thomas Gilson
College of Charleston, gilsont@cofc.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://docs.lib.purdue.edu/atg

Part of the Library and Information Science Commons

Recommended Citation
Gilson, Thomas (2009) "From the Reference Desk," Against the Grain: Vol. 21: Iss. 2, Article 27.
DOI: http://dx.doi.org/10.7771/2380-176X.2570

This document has been made available through Purdue e-Pubs, a service of the Purdue University Libraries. Please contact epubs@purdue.edu for additional information.
 against the grain

CEO, East View Information Services, Inc. and East View Cartographic, Inc.
10601 Wayzata Blvd, Minneapolis, MN 55305
Phone: (952) 252-1201 • Fax: (952) 252-1202
<klee@eastview.com> www.eastview.com www.cartographic.com

Kent D. Lee

BORN AND LIVED: Minneapolis, MN.

EARLY LIFE: Oldest child of hard-working machine-shop owner and nursing supervisor. Grew up hunting and trapping before suburban sprawl took over family home. Formative job was night shift emergency room technician while going to college.

PROFESSIONAL CAREER AND ACTIVITIES: Running EVIS and EVC.

FAMILY: Wife Zina and four kids (Sasha, Nadia, Alex, Rachel).

IN MY SPARE TIME I LIKE: Pheasant hunting, mushroom hunting, skiing, winter camping.

FAVORITE BOOKS: Zorba the Greek, Paradise Below Zero, Legacy of Ashes: The History of the CIA.

PET PEEVES: Televisions.

PHILOSOPHY: The Golden Rule: do unto others as you would have them do unto you. It’s a small world and what goes around comes around.

MOST MEMORABLE CAREER ACHIEVEMENT: Working to make the achievements of Russian cartographers known worldwide — Russians are to maps as the French are to wine.

GOAL I HOPE TO ACHIEVE FIVE YEARS FROM NOW: Successfully execute the EVIS vision of becoming the preeminent intermediary in the “foreign” language information business.

HOW/WHERE DO I SEE THE INDUSTRY IN FIVE YEARS: Better than the present. There will still be too many products, lots of language/metadata challenges, lots of funding challenges for libraries and other end-users, but intermediaries and publishers will still have a big role to play.

From the Reference Desk

by Tom Gilson (Head, Reference Services, Addlestone Library, College of Charleston, 66 George Street, Charleston, SC 29401; Phone: 843-953-8014; Fax: 843-953-8019) <gilsont@cofc.edu>

Oxford University Press adds to its collection of exceptional works on African American history with the publication of the Encyclopedia of African American History 1896-Present (2009 9780195167795, $595).

Subtitled From the Age of Segregation to the Twenty First Century this work chronicles both the trials and tribulations that African Americans have endured as well as their successes and triumphs up to, and including, the recent election of Barack Obama.

Edited by respected scholar and specialist Paul Finkelman, these five volumes contain some 1,250 articles covering an impressive diversity of topics and issues from art and architecture to laws and legislation; education and academics to radio, television and film; and racism and segregation to political and social movements. In addition, numerous biographical sketches are included. These entries cover the full range of occupations and professions from civil rights activists to minstrel show performers and from entrepreneurs and business professionals to religious leaders. The articles are descriptive and fact filled overviews offering solid factual information as well as a starting point for further discovery. As you would expect, each entry has a bibliography of relevant books and articles appropriate to the importance of the topic as well as “see also” references to related entries. Each article is signed and black and white photos complement the text.

The Encyclopedia also offers numerous special features including a complete directory of contributors and their affiliations, a thematic outline of entries, a chronology, and a thorough and comprehensive index. As one examines this set, the overall impact is one of expert, but accessible, scholarship presented with quality production values focused on meeting the needs of readers. Scholars, students as well as interested lay readers will find this work both useful and appealing.

continued on page 53
This five-volume set continues in the tradition of its acclaimed earlier companion, the Encyclopedia of African American History 1619-1895 (2006, 978-0195167771, check Amazon or B&N for pricing). They are both significant achievements that anyone with a serious interest in the African American experience will value, and as such, are core additions to most college and university libraries. (Both sets are part the online reference collection Oxford African American Studies Center at http://www.oxfordaasc.com/public/.)

In terms of the recent literature, these companion sets offer more specific focus than Oxford’s Africana: the Encyclopedia of the African and African American Experience (2005, 978-0195170559) and are slightly more up to date than Gale’s Encyclopedia of African-American Culture and History: the Black Experience in the Americas (2005, 978-0028658162). However, in all fairness, it must be said that these other works are exceptional in their own ways and libraries needing to build collections supporting African American studies will want to own them all.

The Encyclopedia of African Religion (2009, 9781412936361, $325) offers a unique look at a topic that up to this point has received little, if any, attention in the reference literature. Published by Sage, this two-volume set seeks to explain the concepts and complexities of African religion and its response to the sacred. However, it does so with respect for the traditional and indigenous, and not filtered through a Christian or Western perspective. It is informed by the concept of Africism “an umbrella term that … represents the oneness of African religion as manifested in the diverse religious expressions observed in Africa.” It is also presents “classical African religious ideas” “… as significant forerunners of much of continental African thought,” thus showing the essential influence traditional religion has in the life of the continent.

Edited by respected scholars Molefi Kete Asante and Ama Mazama, the Encyclopedia consists of nearly 500 articles written by more than 100 scholars. Coverage runs from articles that discuss specific deities and divinities to those that focus on sacred spaces and objects, ancestral figures, taboos and ethics, as well as ritual and ceremonies. There are also entries that describe individual traditions, important concepts and values, the place of communalism and family, the importance of symbols, signs, and sounds and relevance of specific texts and oral traditions. The articles are straightforward and factual but often contain references to the work of other respected scholars. Aside from the general index, there is a Reader’s Guide that locates articles on related topics as well as “see also” references placed at the end of each article. There is also an appendix listing the names of God, or the supreme deity, used by ethnic groups throughout Africa and a comprehensive bibliography gathered from the various entries in the Encyclopedia.

The Encyclopedia of African Religion is a deeply serious work dedicated to the mission of “elevating the discourse” about the “African contribution to ideas of religion, spirituality, and ethics.” Whether discussing broad concepts like ontology or cosmology or individual traditions like Dogon or Mende, it offers a perspective centered in the African experience untainted by Western notions of Africa. In providing this approach, editors Asante and Mazama do both students and scholars a service that will be appreciated. Academic libraries that support religious or African studies program will definitely want a copy in their reference collections, and possibly one for circulation if budgets allow.

This title is also available from Sage Reference Online. In order to get pricing information, email Sage at <librarysales@sagepub.com>.

continued on page 54
From the Reference Desk
from page 53

Students of American folk music will welcome a recent publication from Greenwood. Authored by Norm Cohen, American Folk Songs: a Regional Encyclopedia (2008, 978-0313340475, $149.95) is a two-volume set that provides the lyrics along with the historical context for 487 folk songs from across the country.

In defining folksongs, Cohen takes “the perspective that these are songs that survive in the community without the need for commercial media.” They are songs that are “perpetuated by transmission from person to person or community to community by noncommercial means (generally orally, but other media can serve).” According to Cohen, the songs collected here all fit under these criteria at one time or another.

Divided by region the set works its way westward first showing a chronological development by default. The first volume covers New England, Midland (North Atlantic) the Upper South and the Deep South and the Ozarks. The second volume moves steadily west discussing the Great Lakes, Midwest Plains, Southwest, Mountain Region and the Far West and the Pacific. These broad regions are divided by individual states and then within the states the songs are presented chronologically. However, the set does not contain individual entries as such. These regional sections take the form of long essays with subheadings for each state covered. Each of these state sections provides the lyrics of songs accompanied by its historical context as well as a discussion of the origins and the dissemination history of the song. In fact, one of the features of the set is the reprinting of some of the original broadsides used to circulate the songs. These help illustrate the Encyclopedia as well as provide a nice historical touch. A variety of song types are covered including war songs, those that center on historical events, tragedies and disasters, songs in praise of the state or its inhabitants, songs about local crimes or criminals and ethnic songs. The vast majority are in English although there are a few Spanish language songs, especially in the Southwest and Far West and Pacific sections. Providing access to the text is a song index as well as general index. The song index is alphabetical by title and points to the state and regional section where the song can be found, but oddly, not the page number. However, it does reference other sources where the songs are listed including G. Malcolm Laws’ Native American Balladry and his American Balladry from British Broadsides as well as the Roud Folksong Index, an electronic folkson database maintained at http://library.efdss.org/cgi-bin/query.cgi?query=

In this month’s column, please welcome two new ATG reviewers. Jolanda-Pieta van Arnhem (Joey) has worked at the College of Charleston for about as long as Google has been around, first as an educational technologist and most recently as a library technologist. She completed her M.F.A. in Visual Arts with a specialization in visual culture studies at the Vermont College of Fine Arts in 2009. Jolanda is currently working with the College’s Reference Librarians to expand the library’s Information Literacy offerings into the social Web and online multimedia. She is also an adjunct professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology where she teaches Research Methods in Expressive Culture. Jerry Spiller completed his M.S.I.S at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 2004. With a background in language and culture studies as well as information design, he coordinates the College of Charleston’s Language Resource Center, teaching workshops on information resources and designing the Websites for the School of Languages, Cultures and World Affairs. Happy reading, everyone! — DV Facts on File adds to its Almanacs of American Wars series with the Vietnam War Almanac (2009, 978-0816071029, $95). Written by James H. Willbanks, the director of the Department of Military History at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, this work follows the successful lead of the prior titles in this series.

The bulk of this volume is devoted to a day by day chronology that enables the reader to trace America’s involvement in Vietnam from the joint French-American advisory phase starting in 1950 through the American

continued on page 55

Book Reviews — Monographic Musings

Column Editor: Debbie Vaughn (College of Charleston) <vaughnd@cofc.edu>

Column Editor’s Note: Libraries and librarians have had a complex relationship with Google since the Internet conglomerate’s search engine grew in popularity about a decade ago. People’s ability to easily peruse the World Wide Web has seemingly decreased the demand for librarians’ assistance in the quest for information; however, the information available at one’s fingertips has increased the need for assistance in organizing and sorting through the glut of information available to those very people. This paradox has been explored and editorialized in newspapers, trade publications, peer-reviewed journals, and books — including Fool’s Gold: Why the Internet is No Substitute for a Library. How has Google, the most popular search engine, become practically synonymous with Internet searching? The verb “google” can even be found in the OED, and it seems that once a noun becomes so commonplace that it is used a verb (think: “networking,” “scrapbooking,” and — thanks to Calvin and Hobbes (“verbing”), then that noun/verb has potentially changed the course of history — or at least popular culture. It is fitting, then, that Greenwood’s series Corporations That Changed the World should include Google in its ranks.

In this month’s column, please welcome two new ATG reviewers. Jolanda-Pieta van Arnhem (Joey) has worked at the College of Charleston for about as long as Google has been around, first as an educational technologist and most recently as a library technologist. She completed her M.F.A. in Visual Arts with a specialization in visual culture studies at the Vermont College of Fine Arts in 2009. Jolanda is currently working with the College’s Reference Librarians to expand the library’s Information Literacy offerings into the social Web and online multimedia. She is also an adjunct professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology where she teaches Research Methods in Expressive Culture. Jerry Spiller completed his M.S.I.S at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 2004. With a background in language and culture studies as well as information design, he coordinates the College of Charleston’s Language Resource Center, teaching workshops on information resources and designing the Websites for the School of Languages, Cultures and World Affairs. Happy reading, everyone! — DV

Reviewed by Jolanda-Pieta van Arnhem (Library Technologist, College of Charleston Libraries) <vanarnhemj@cofc.edu>

Fool’s Gold is a satirical expansion of Dr. Herring’s ten talking points on why the Internet is no substitute for a library that became an article and a poster. Dr. Herring is the Dean of Libraries at Winthrop University in South Carolina. His book opens a larger discussion about the quality of knowledge that can be gained in a library versus what may seem a random collection of information found online. The discussion continued on page 55

continued on page 55

<http://www.against-the-grain.com>
force build up and initial combat in the mid 1960’s, to the large unit offensive expansion in 1967-69, to the Vietnamization and the American withdrawal in the early 1970s, and finally to the fall of Saigon in 1975. There is also a section of brief biographies covering the major players from William Westmoreland to Ho Chi Minh and from Richard Nixon to General Vo Nguyen Giap. Adding to the value of the book are a series of appendices that include information like the U.S. troop commitments by year, the military force commitments by America’s allies, Allied casualties by year, specific U.S. military campaigns during the war, U.S. government expenditures on the war, troop withdrawals from 1969-1972, and Medal of Honor recipients. There is also a short section of useful maps as well as a selected bibliography and a helpful general index.

The Vietnam War Almanac is a handy and compact volume that will play multiple roles from finding a useful place on library reference and circulating shelves to supplementing the personal collections of students and scholars. In fact, anyone with a serious interest in the complexities of America’s experience in Vietnam will find this a fact filled and balanced compendium of valuable information.

Book Reviews
from page 54

plicates the issues that surround both the betterment and the drawbacks provided by the Web in library services. Herring presents the argument that a decline in teaching, as well as in reading, is resulting in an overall deterioration of literacy in today’s society. This trend, along with the ubiquitous availability of information provided by Google and other search providers is fueling the potential for libraries to become obsolete as new generations of users fail to appreciate its services. There are comprehensive chapter notes for each chapter, along with lists of Web resources that illustrate the points and examples given in the text.

Herring notes the overwhelming amount of information available on the Web, pointing out the distinction between mere information and knowledge, which requires both the theoretical foundations and practical applications that human experience bring. He argues that libraries collect and organize knowledge, which the Web cannot do. He also points out the pitfalls of unregulated incursions of misinformation, fraud and predation possible on the Web. The dangers of sites run by hate groups or the possibility of identity theft are two examples he offers for the superiority of the library environment. Indeed, Herring makes frequent calls for Internet filtering in libraries, removing potentially pornographic or offensive materials, and decries what he sees as the ALA’s absolutist position on the First Amendment.

In a later chapter, “A Mile Wide and a Mind-Numbing Inch Deep,” Herring offers that the Web as a modern repository is reflective of the cultural shift of today’s “snap and grab” mentality, and that its short attention span and disregard for formality are having extremely harmful effects on the literacy of a rising generation. As a result, he argues that the historical record of our culture is being more truncated, and the only solution may be getting more people to appreciate libraries’ roles in preservation and access.

Herring espouses a point of view that is not uncommon in the debate about widespread perception of the Internet as a threat to the user base of libraries. This debate is not new, however it is ongoing. Regardless of the reader’s ultimate assessment of the arguments presented in Fool’s Gold, the work is valuable for inclusion in an academic library setting because the points Herring raises beg to be addressed.

continued on page 56