Via Alliteration

F. C. Hockema
Vice President and Executive Dean, Purdue University
(Contributed as toastmaster at Road School Banquet)

Brother Ben's bountiful program for bigger and better highways and bridges beckons back to the Boilermaker Campus the boys who want to bring home the bacon by becoming beneficiaries of the bargains and blessings of brand-new, brilliant, basic, road-building ideas from red-blooded, brisk, benevolent, busy, bookish-balanced, beaming, blue-ribbon brain boxes; and by breaking bread together at banquets, talking about their boring or baffling burdens or how to spend billions from Federal and State banks for more extensive highways and byways, and blasting the billions of billboards which bespeckle the highways carrying ads for bananas, biscuits, butternut bread, bolts, bath salts, baseballs, baking powder, and booze; tempting browbeaten and bewildered drivers to raise their blurry bifocals in order to better see the bashful, blushing, blinking, blonde and brunette bathing beauties in the background.