Libraries on the Book Buying Merry-Go-Round: .................. 1
Internet Book Seller vs. Library Book Vendor by Sydney K. Allen and Heather S. Miller — Once upon a time libraries purchased current in print domestic books from book vendors who specialized in providing books to the library market. Then enter the Internet.

Whither Electronic Journals? ........... 24 by Judy Luther — When she decided to update her June 1997 ATG article on “Full Text Journal Subscriptions,” (see ATG, June, 1997, p.18-24), Judy says she knew that the landscape had changed in the last three years, with new players, evolving roles and innovative business models. However, she didn’t appreciate how rapidly the Web had impacted economic models and trends.

Do We Have This In Full-Text? ........... 28
Providing Access to Content in Full-Text Aggregated Databases by John McDonald and Jimmy Ghaphery — Fulltext electronic journals and fulltext aggregated databases have significantly extended the ability to deliver scholarly content to library users regardless of time or place. Is it important to provide title level access to specific publications available in these databases?

Learning From The Big Guys: ........... 31
Small College Libraries Take Advantage Of Big Brother’s Hard Work, by Joan Bartram — What collection analysis tools are you using these days? Are you using collection analysis tools? One library’s need to learn about their collection was accelerated by a decennial accreditation visit.
