The palmetto trees down here aren’t used to snow and neither are the palmetto bugs! It has been quite a winter for you and me! It snowed two days straight in Charleston sending those of us who don’t know how to drive in the snow straight to our beds. Of course, it snowed at night so that we Charlestonians wouldn’t see what was happening; we just awakened to barely half an inch of snow two mornings in a row. Wow! This is not something we are used to. My son Raymond who lives up in Watertown, NY, thinks we are horrible wimps. I guess it’s a matter of perspective.

The year 2000 has arrived and we here at ATG have plenty of news on the state of the industry. Lolly Gasaway looks at copyright, Dan Halloran looks at bookselling, Karen Hunter looks at publishing, Then we have looked at the Tasini and Ryan cases from several perspectives. Georgia Harper as well as Phil Wallas have looked at the cases from the perspectives of the library and the aggregator. Ana Terry rounds the issue out by asking for viewpoints from different people in the industry. And finally David Stamps eloquently tells us why we still buy books. Other things to look for in this issue: Lynne Lysiak tells us about a delegation of librarians visiting Cuba, Heather Miller takes a great look at the last Charleston Conference of the 20th century, Sandy Paul tells us about a barcode survey, Thomas Bacheller discusses scholarly communication and the university press, Barry Fast talks about the Internet and government, and I could go on and on. We have two great interviews in this issue. One with Jonathan Tasini and the other with Charles Halpin. One talks about electronic rights, writers and publishers, and the other talks about a new look to an old standby, Books In Print. How can you miss reading all of this? You can’t, can you?

Oh, and in this issue we are trying out something new. Since a lot of you have asked us about jobs, we are instituting a new “classified section” on a trial basis. There are two jobs listed there, see page 40. Let us know what you think of this new feature!

My hands are freezing so I’m going to go find me a fireplace and read the rest of ATG. While my teeth are chattering, I will no doubt find myself wishing for 80 degree weather. Who would have ever guessed?

Yr. Ed.

Dear Editor:

Hello. Just a little housekeeping: I haven’t rec’d the Dec/Jan copy of Against the Grain yet, and the other two people who attended the Charleston Conference this year, with me, have received their copies. Now we are wondering/trying to remember: is a subscription part of the conference fee or do we have to subscribe after you’ve hooked us with one year? And yes, you’ve hooked us! I circulated Against the Grain this last year, and several non-tech librarians want it, before the Tech librarians get it read! By the way, we can’t decide which was better: the conference or the city.

Thanks, Karen Clift

Dear Editor:

I have just read Martin White’s recent article (“International Dateline: Higher Education in the UK,” ATG, v.11#2, p.85).

It seems incredible that, in writing for publication on UK HE libraries in an acquisitions journal, Mr. White did not discuss the purchasing consortia. He implies that purchasing consortia are nascent (“there has been significant interest in the creation of purchasing consortia on a regional basis”); the Southern Universities Purchasing Consortium (SUPC) has been active since 1974!

Mr. White does the UK great disservice in ignoring the existing high level of organisation and activity, and the effects of consortia on the market. In a recent study we estimated that, at the end of 1998, 75% of HE expenditure on books and 53% of HE expenditure on serials were covered by consortium agreements. Annual savings ascribable to consortia were of the order of £2.8m, well over 1% of total HE library spending (including shelfing).

Coverage and savings have increased this year as new contracts have been awarded.
