Acquisitions and ILL
by Michelle Flintbaugh and Robin Moskal
An introduction to this issue’s feature articles.

Truth about Faculty Perception and Use of Collection Development Opportunities:

One Library’s Case Study by Madeleine Bombeld and Arlene Hanefeld — During the summer of 2002, professionals at UNCW/ Wilmington met to discuss how collaboration between Interlibrary Loan and Collection Development activities could enhance library services.

Using Interlibrary Loan Data as a Selection Tool:

ILL Trails Provide Collection Clues by Camille Livingston and Antje Mays — By providing additional insights into library needs, ILL data can enable libraries to acquire more customized library collections.

The Intercession

Where Collection Development and Acquisitions Meet Interlibrary Loan by Maria Silva Kuhn — Now that the library profession is using consortia and advances in technology have made resource sharing a more affordable and practical alternative, recommending its use to patrons has become more acceptable than before.

Buyer Beware:

Using Interlibrary Loan Requests in Purchasing Decisions by Jane L. Ingold — It is not an uncommon practice for libraries to use Interlibrary Loan requests as a tool for collection development.
