April 2007

Back Talk -- Incredible Edible India and Change Management

Anthony (Tony) W. Ferguson

University of Hong Kong, ferguson@hkucc.hku.hk

Follow this and additional works at: https://docs.lib.purdue.edu/atg

Part of the Library and Information Science Commons

Recommended Citation

DOI: https://doi.org/10.7771/2380-176X.5054

This document has been made available through Purdue e-Pubs, a service of the Purdue University Libraries. Please contact epubs@purdue.edu for additional information.
think I should have borrowed a tactic employed at Columbia to help staff working in the Main Library endure ten plus years of its floor by floor renovation process. Floor by floor we had to move out of the way of the builders and then move into the new area. Some people moved more than once. You can imagine the chaos that we had to deal with during these many years. To keep everyone from going crazy, they produced a monthly newsletter that did three things: it gave us information on what was happening to us (fulfilling one of the basic needs that we all have), it helped clarify what could be expected in the near and more distant futures and it gave us a feeling that while we had to endure many inconveniences, a better day was coming (helping us deal with the difficulties of the loss curve and giving us realistic expectations of what was to come), and it helped us avoid thinking that this process would never end (helping us to fight off irrational fears that since we couldn’t get our work done, our performance evaluations would be terrible and we would lose our jobs and we would have to move in with our parents once again).

Change, like cooperation, is a bit of an unnatural act. But I think paying more attention to these five factors can help a lot. I hope to do better next time.

Endnotes

I Hear the Train A Comin’
from page 91

Places and Events were set up on the Flickr Website in January 2006. Images loaded into these groups are harvested on a weekly basis into the National Library’s collection. Over a thousand images are being harvested each month. A third example concerns the use of Web 2.0 technologies to further the library’s instructional mission. A good instance of this may be found at Washington State University. The library recently released its first tutorial podcast. It is a downloadable mp3 file that discusses search strategies on the library’s information gateway. For students unwilling or unable to come to the library for an in-person lesson, this provides the next best thing.

Another way that libraries can play effectively in the 2.0 space is to go where the action is. Lock into step with patrons’ current Web behaviors. One obvious example of this is tighter integration with the university portal and course management systems. If any campuswide community exists within the academy today, it is the course management system. It is thus sensible to expose library services there. What materials on course reading lists are currently available via the library, either physically or with the click of a button? What databases and digital collections are relevant to students taking Economics 110? For that matter, what books has a patron checked out that might soon be due? Established online communities at which your patrons congregate and interact (such as the course management system) are an opportunity. These pathways can be leveraged as a means of service delivery.

It is, of course, quite likely that by the time we all get up to speed on Web 2.0, the world will have moved on to Web 3.0. In terms of scholarly communication, I suspect this will mean ever shrinking barriers separating researchers from content, but with a greater success rate in filtering out noise. Today, I can get information at the snap of a finger from a thousand different sources. What I can’t do is get only that information that is relevant to me, and nothing else, devoid of false positives and false negatives.

Web 3.0 will see people sharing information, data, content, expertise, and opinions in a way that first and second generation Websites cannot accommodate. This sharing will take the form of rapid peer-to-peer communication, unvetted by any expert authority save for my own preset preferences. Literature services that know I want peer-reviewed articles about macroeconomic policy, but not working papers. I want the latest Steven Levitt video diary beamed to my iPod, but not my work machine. I want my recently finished presentation posted to the institutional repository, the course management system, my personal page, and the virtual community of professorial presentations simultaneously, with the click of one button. This will be the 3.0 world.

In this reality, the library will play a vital role in guiding patrons through the various opportunities to customize the receipt and exchange of information, ideas, and knowledge. As we all know, faculty are not shy in articulating what they want from us. They are, however, impatient in investing the time and effort necessary to maximize the benefits the library has to offer. Libraries will continue to hold their hands to improve the efficiency of their scholarly communication, from Web 2.0 to 3.0 and beyond.

AGAINST THE GRAIN CLASSIFIEDS
JOBS ! ITEMS FOR SALE ! ITEMS WANTED !

Send Your Classified Ads To: Edna Laughrey e laughrey@aol.com or call 734.429.1029

DUMBARTON OAKS RESEARCH LIBRARY SEeks ACQUISITIONS Assistant

Acquisitions Assistant: perform bibliographic searches, create orders, monitor order fulfillment, generate claims, create invoices. Required: 1 yr. of library technical services experience, preferably in acquisitions. Details: www.doaks.org excellent benefits; 35-hour work-week. Send resume to Jessic Angulo, Dumbarton Oaks, 1703 32nd Street, NW, Washington, DC 20007 or Email Jobs@doaks.org. EOE

Dumbarton Oaks Research Library
1703 32nd Street, NW, Washington, DC 20007
Email: Jobs@doaks.org • Equal Opportunity Employer

REGIONAL SALES MANAGER — EASTERN U.S. REGION

Blackwell’s Book Services, an international bookseller with a history of quality, stability and growth has an immediate opening for a Regional Sales Manager for the eastern territory of the U.S. A qualified candidate will possess an MLS with 6 years proven library sales experience in the book/journal trade, a Bachelor’s degree with 8 years sales experience or another combination of training and experience in academic libraries.

We are seeking a candidate to develop an effective territory sales strategy, meet pipeline goals to achieve growth with new accounts or increase business with existing customers, forecast a budget, manage expenses, monitor and report on market trends, and work independently. Management of the territory requires exceptional organizational and negotiation skills to meet key sales initiatives and administrative tasks. The required travel is 65%. In addition, you will need experience using PowerPoint, Excel, Outlook, Word and the Internet. As a Regional Sales Manager excellent written and verbal abilities are essential as you will be make group presentations.

This is an exciting opportunity to represent Blackwell’s vast array of products and services to meet the acquisition, collection development and technological needs of our librarians, and to apply your knowledge and skills to establish mutually beneficial business relationships. A commitment to serve the library community and the company with enthusiasm and dedication is a must.

Blackwell’s Book Services offers a competitive base salary with bonus combined with a benefit package including dental/health/vision/life/LTD and 401(k). Send, email or fax resume with salary history: HR Department – RSME, Blackwell’s Book Services, 100 University Ct., Blackwood, NJ 08012, Fax 856-232-5453, Email: hiring@Blackwell.com. EOE

HR Department-RSME, Blackwell’s Book Services
100 University Court, Blackwood, NJ 08012
Fax 856-232-5453; Email: hiring@Blackwell.com
Equal Opportunity Employer

<http://www.against-the-grain.com>
I just returned from a trip to India. While it was for pleasure, it gave me an opportunity to talk with a good friend Ramesh Mittal, a book dealer http://www.dkagencies.com/, about life and how to be successful. His father had also worked in the book business and had firmly believed in the power of continuity, of sticking to what works. Along with talking and sightseeing, our two families also did a lot of eating. I went thinking that a week’s worth of Indian vegetarianism would help me drop ten pounds or so. Wrong. I returned five pounds heavier.

While looking at all the wonderful ancient sites and eating traditional foods I began to wonder if change was truly important. Yet, I observed that even India is in the midst of redefining itself and there is change everywhere. For example, I found that successful restaurants had adjusted to contemporary demands for good hygiene, beautiful presentation, and good value for price. Indians love sweets and there are shops with refrigerated case after case of desserts prepared in the same ways as they were one hundred years ago. But, in the same shops I found (egg free) Black Forest cakes and Rocky Road ice cream cones. Actually, some of the more traditional accoutrements still exist. Shops with refrigerated case after case of desserts prepared in the same ways as they were one hundred years ago. But, in the same shops I found (egg free) Black Forest cakes and Rocky Road ice cream cones. Actually, some of the more traditional accoutrements still exist.

For example, I found that successful restaurants were replaced by feelings of gain. But these feelings were not universal by any means. Since the loss of their former positions. For younger staff, their new jobs, new titles, and new job descriptions about the rewards that would come their way should they stay the course. We hoped that this sense of loss was lessened when additional supervisory responsibilities were added to fill critical holes in the organization, giving them some of the more traditional accoutrements of power and importance normally associated with their status in the organization.

While I am not ready to say that we totally failed to show sufficient appreciation for all of these factors, it is very easy to admit that we could have done much better. In retrospect I continued on page 93

continued on page 93