This year has begun well, except it's too cold to my taste. I like the weather just like it was in San Diego when ALA was there. Perfect. This issue of ATG is full of all kinds of special stuff. There are the new and different things. This issue is guest edited by Glenda Alvin and Pamela Theus and is about collection development issues in Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs). Six articles by Loretta O'Brien Parham and Janice Franklin, Akilah Nossakhre, Luke Swindler and Terry Hill, Roland Barksdale-Hall, Alfred Willis, and Glenda Alvin give us a good look at an important area of collection development. This issue also includes interviews with Ron Maas the General Manager of Libraries Unlimited, Mitchell Davis VP of Marketing at BookSurge, and Marcia Bartusiak, a freelance Science Writer. From our profiles this month are with Audrey Fenner, our new column editor for “Biz of Acq,” and Leonard DiSanto from H.W. Wilson Co. Also in this issue are two “ATG Special Reports,” one from Joyce Durant titled “Technical Services: Issues in the Electronic Environment,” and one by Chris Matz who tells us if comic books are a worthy consideration on scholarly grounds. “And They Were There” is packed with lots of reports from the 2003 Charleston Conference, so if you weren’t there Kathryn McCarthy, Anthony Watkinson, Rebecca Lenzini, Heather Miller, Rosann Bazirjian, and Ramune Kubilius will tell you some of what you missed. Anthony Watkinson has provided an article on Open Access and we have our normal book and reference reviews from Debbie Vaughn and Tom Gilson, plus “Books Are Us” from Anne Robicheaux, and from the winner of the Rachel K. Schenk Memorial Scholarship “My Love of Books” by Ann Doyle. Mark Herring also has a new column titled appropriately “Little Red Herrings.”

Last but not least, included are reminiscences of our friend and colleague, Dana Alessi who we all miss very much. Several of our old friends have surfaced in these reminiscences. Looking back over back issues of ATG which is sixteen years old, by the way, sixteen, caused me to do more reminiscing. If you have some old issues, look over them. We may think we live in a static world, but we definitely do not!

Happy New Year and love.

Dear Editor:

I have a bone to pick with you! First you were not at the big party that Fred Galli and I threw in the old private train car in San Diego. It was a pretty hot thing. Even John Berry from Library Journal and Leonard Kneffel from American Libraries were there. What were you doing, woman? You sure missed a good time.

Second, I am curious why you have not mentioned my big triumph! My son, Fred, has been elected as Town Supervisor of Lewiston. He will certainly keep them all straight!

Well, I have to go. Keep on your toes. Papa Lyman is watching and getting out his pen.

Lyman Newton

Rumors

The Stanford Daily for Friday, January 30, 2004, has an article on Stanford's decision to leave ARL. “Library leaves group” by Corina Yen. Stanford was one of the founding members of ARL in 1932. “We have other ways of engaging productivity with our peers and partners in the research community,” said Michael Keller, Stanford University Librarian. http://dailystanford.edu/daily/99-00/11-8-1999/news/tempo?page=content&id=12877&repository=0001_article

And speaking of Michael Keller (who we hope to have as a keynote in Charleston 2004), I can’t help myself. Way back in June of 2003 ATG Rumors (v:15/3, p.10) told y’all about Michael Keller and the DigiBooks robot as reported in the New York Times, May 12, 2003 by John Markoff (“The Evelyn Wood of Digitized Book Scanners?”). This project is now called “Project Ocean.”

The incredible Audrey Fenner <afenner@uncg.edu> is the new Biz of Acq editor! Did ya’ll meet her in Charleston? She is head of acquisitions at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro and hails from Canada. Her profile is in this issue, p.65. Audrey takes over the editorship from the awesome Michelle Flinchbaugh <flinchba@umbc.edu> who is head of acquisitions at the University of Maryland in Baltimore. Michelle is our guest editor for the April issue, coming up. Speaking of awesome and incredible, Glenda Alvin and Pamela Theus are our guest editors for this issue of Against The Grain on collection development in Historically Black Colleges and Universities, I learned a lot. Enjoy.
