Hmong Daughter; Womyn

Linda Hawj
Metropolitan State University

Mom and dad,
I can see that I’m just a Hmong daughter to you;
A Hmong womyn.
I’m not a son; I’m not a man,
but I can share with you and I can show you what,
mankind can’t.
Success and happiness
doesn’t only come in the form of a son, a man.

Because:
I can sweep away the clouds and give you the light of the sun,
I can quench your thirst and carry you gallons of the ocean,
I can build you shelter; gardens and show you resources of the earth,
I can create art; life and make wonders of the stars,
I can fill your hunger up and give you the riches by the wealth of my love.
But that can only be a reality to you If you,
open up to receive me, welcomingly
as your daughter; a womyn.
About the Author

Artist Activist. Linda Hawj is an emerging, multi-disciplined Artist in the forms of writing, poetry, spoken word, hip hop emcee and filmmaking. As an Activist, she advocates for the equity of Hmong LGBTQI community, gender and racial justice, exploring and understanding identities of the self as well as self-empowerment. She pairs her love for Art and passion for humanitarian work as social and cultural changing tools; she creatively expresses and actively speaks out to evoke awareness, access and change. She is currently pursuing an Individualized BA in Artist Activism at Metropolitan State University.
