Journal Jumble

Concocted by Jerry Seay (Library School Guru)

What? Still perusing your last exciting Against the Grain issue? What are you...slow? Well, pick up the pace. Meanwhile, this puzzle will give you another reason to scan last issue's Against the Grain. The page number in front of each clue refers to a page in the February issue of Against the Grain on which a graphic, picture or word will help you solve the clue. Discover the answer by filling in the blanks and then unscrambling the circled letters to form the name of a journal published by Blackwell Publishers and edited by Jagdish Bhagwati. (I wish I had a name like that.)

= p. 30 Smart folks read ATG to get the latest of this.

= p. 46 Ancient word processor

= p.25 Top reads

Put the circled letters in the space below and then unscramble them to make the journal title. I've given you some letters and put them in the correct squares for you. What a guy.

Dear Bookfriend:

Parmer Books deal in rare, antiquarian, out-of-print, and new books on VOYAGES, EXPLORATION, & DISCOVERY. We feature material on the Arctic & Antarctic, Sea Voyages, Africa, The Americas, Asia, Australia, and the Islands of the South Pacific.

DISCOVERY & EXPLORATION reveals exciting and adventurous stories. Humans have continually pursued an instinct to know the world around them. Lord Edward Shackleton, son of Antarctic Explorer Sir Ernest Shackleton (first voyage to Antarctic 1901-1904.), writes his philosophy on why man explores in the introduction to Debenham's DISCOVERY AND EXPLORATION AN ATLAS-HISTORY: "The real story of discovery and exploration begins with those early travelers who went in search of trade, who felt compelled to disseminate religious ideas, and who wanted to claim new lands for the glory of their country. Yet many explorers have set out without such apparent motives, and if we ask why these particular men went traveling, we might just as well ask why man undertakes anything. Sometimes they went out of simple curiosity, which is the basis of scientific exploration today. Certainly some of the very early travelers were men of curiosity who were seeking knowledge for its own sake. It is this striving history and adventure of exploration and discovery are contained in the books offered by Parmer Books. We search worldwide to obtain pertinent new and out-of-print. titles to offer our clients. Titles on subjects like these as well as expedition diaries, logs of voyages, biographies of explorers, and first person narratives of journeys.
