Little Red Herrings — Of Facebook, Twitter and Social Networking Sites

by Mark Y. Herring (Dean of Library Services, Dacus Library, Winthrop University) <herrimg@winthrop.edu>

F or those who have read even one of my musings, it will come as no surprise that I find Facebook, Twitter, social networking sites (SNS), and the rest of Webology less than inspiring. If you had read nothing other than the screech I bellowed about Google a few columns back, you’d know that I find all this talk about the Web replacing libraries more than a little silly. I find it downright idiotic. Still, one must keep an open mind.

So, yes, I have a Facebook account, I tweet from time to time (but only about things I think others would like to know, such as library-related news and not about the gas I passed at noon), own an iPhone, have recently begun to blog, and have spent much of the summer preparing to teach a class this fall using Kindles and whatever can be delivered thereon. Some might consider this the height of hypocrisy: cavilling about the Web but using it to its fullest extent. Call it rationalization, but I see using the Web while complaining about its defects the same as having an annual physical while harping about healthcare. Furthermore, how is one ever to make sense of all this without investigating whether Web 2.0 can be made useful for humans 1.0?

The iPhone I use is like any other phone/planner I have owned. I have found it marginally better than previous such phones. For reasons that remain a mystery to me, I could never get my email on prior phones in real-time or even near real-time. The iPhone is an improvement in that regard. Apple products do work as advertised, something I cannot say about other technologies I’ve used. So far, I have found Twitter interesting but a bit too narcissistic for my tastes. Still, I plan to have my students use it in the class this fall and perhaps tweet something other than their last date, beer, or the bug they saw on the sidewalk while walking to class. I’m not overly optimistic on this count. Getting them to read at all is a problem, so having them tweet about what they’ve read may well be impossible. Still, I’m going to make the effort.

My Facebook experience grew out of my desire to see the library have a Facebook account. We tried this with MySpace, and while it didn’t really fail, it never really got much of a Webhold, so to say. Our new Facebook page is up, and we added a blog to it this summer. (You can find mine at www.winthrop.edu; click on the “Library News” link. Be sure to sign up for our feeds.) The blogging/Facebook updating has been more interesting but it’s all very new and perhaps too early to say what effect it will have, if any, on whatever else we do. We added an instant message feature last year to our Webpage and while it’s being used, it’s not being used as much as we hoped.

All in all, Web 2.0 has been a little overwhelming. I attribute this lackluster unveiling to something I have done wrong — heaven forbid that it be something wrong with the Web or its ability to deliver! I continue to hope it will improve as time goes on. I do find it an additional bit of work for everyone involved: those who maintain the page, those who blog, our photographer who shoots our daily photo, and so on. I happen to be blessed with some very talented folks who are interested in this, too, and who have the technical know-how to bring it about. If anyone can make it successful, they can and likely in spite of me.

All of this comes at an interesting time. The dean at Southern Methodist University (Jose A. Bowen) has come out asking his colleagues to “teach naked”; that is, to please (papers. Read most of them at http://digital.casalini.it/retreat. continued on page 71

rumors continued on page 71

continued on page 71

<http://www.against-the-grain.com>
sites. These fall into two neat categories, access and liability. Access issues have to do with governments, schools, businesses or any other entity denying folks their “inalienable” rights to access Facebook, Twitter, Bebo, YouTube, or any other SNS or SNS-type entity. Liability issues revolve around SNS creating, allowing or evenabetting illegal activity. It can be as obvious as the whole Craigslist brouhaha that ended in murder, or it can be less than obvious as when posted personal profiles sink careers or when admissions officers check that National Merit’s Facebook page only to find nude or semi-nude photos. The obvious court cases include DOPA, CIPA and so on, but there are others, to be sure.

So I call on all of you to send me your examples. I want to put together the most comprehensive compilation I can, and I can do that so much better by relying on the genius of crowds, or the far and madding crowds, or the trailing crowds of glory — no, wait, that’s clouds. Never mind. Anyway, you get my drift. I can be reached at <herringm@winthrop.edu>, on Facebook or Twitter (Kipper56).

In case you’re wondering, I already posted this in various Web-based places and am now doing so in print, too. It will be interesting to see which medium draws the most notice. I’ll keep your posted, an old phrase that now has me calling on all of you to send me your examples. I want to put together the most comprehensive compilation I can, and I can do that so much better by relying on the genius of crowds, or the far and madding crowds, or the trailing crowds of glory — no, wait, that’s clouds. Never mind. Anyway, you get my drift. I can be reached at <herringm@winthrop.edu>, on Facebook or Twitter (Kipper56).

In case you’re wondering, I already posted this in various Web-based places and am now doing so in print, too. It will be interesting to see which medium draws the most notice. I’ll keep your posted, an old phrase that now has a very tech-savvy ring to it, huh? 🙄

Endnotes

Rumors

Forgot! What a great Rumor! About another marriage! Dennis Brunning <dennis.brunning@gmail.com> wore a tuxedo to his daughter’s wedding! I was searching for a picture but couldn’t dig one up. Can you? In the meantime, see this issue for Dennis’ latest column. It’s about the death of the Internet, some thoughts about Amazon’s Kindle, blogging, and a few other things, p.68, and also p.52 for his interview with Steve Bosch.

Speaking of Dennis’ column, I noticed that he mentions the latest Nicholson Baker article in The New Yorker (August 3, 2009) about the Kindle. “A New Page: Can Kindle really improve on the book?” I have to admit that, being Against the Grain myself, I find it refreshing to hear some circumspection regarding the eBook. It’s not that the eBook is bad, it’s just that, to advocate that the eBook will or should totally REPLACE the printed book, is, frankly, unrealistic and ignores the problem of preservation in the digital arena. http://www.newyorker.com/reporting/2009/8/03/090803fa_fact_bak...

Speaking of which, I just got an advanced reading copy of The Case for Books: Past, Present, and Future by none other than Robert Darnton who is the director of the Harvard University Library, founder of Gutenberg-e, and author of a regular column in The New York Review of Books as well as countless other monographs. Getting up on my hobby horse again, I will quote from Bill Gates (quoted in Robert Darnton’s book): “Reading off the screen is still vastly inferior to reading off of paper. Even I, who have these expensive screens and fancy myself as a pioneer of this Web Lifestyle, when it comes to something over about four or five pages, I print it out and I like to have it to carry around with me and annotate. And it’s quite a hurdle for technology to achieve to match that level of usability.” (p.69). At this point in the development of the technology, I have to agree.

While we are still talking about books, I want to call your attention to another one. Books as History: the Importance of Books Beyond...