businesses, will give the opening keynote on Thursday morning. In her abstract she says today’s scientist is “... looking for a new kind of help. They want air traffic control support” to navigate through all the online data and research. Talk about serendipity! Can’t wait to hear the speech! Thursday morning, first thing!

The bookstore is still alive and well in some parts of the world! Was intrigued to read the interview with John Riley that was done in September by The Spine Nine, a great Website that promotes old bookstores! John is the owner of Gabriel’s Books which is in Northampton, Mass. John opened his first bookstore when he still a senior in college and stocked it with the 3,000 books he had already bought himself. I was embarrassed that I have known John for forever, right, John? and I didn’t know any of these things about him! John, BTW, is also a fantastic sales rep for BUSCA in Ithaca NY.  http://www.getaspinebooks.com/2012/09/the-spine-nine-gabriel-books.html

And, speaking of bookstores — Tom Leonard talks eloquently about bookstores like the Intimate Bookshop in Chapel Hill, NC (which I myself remember, pardon the pun, intimately), Powell’s in Portland, Oregon, Booked Up in Archer City, and the main subject of his column Browser’s Books in Albany, Oregon, owned by Scott Givens. See this issue, p.88.  http://www.browsersbookstore.com/newsletter.html

And speaking of Booked Up, remember when my son Raymond Walser (talk about a Bookman! he knows where every book is in our house and we have a lot of them and he rarely visits since he’s married with kids and in the Army). Anyway, Raymond wrote an article many issues ago about Larry McMurtry’s Booked Up. When Raymond retires from the Army I would not be surprised if he opened a bookstore and maybe he would need an acquisitions assistant!

CLOAK AND DAGGER by Bruce Strauch (The Citadel)

Who better than Robert Service to bring us the wild, wooly, and murderous story of espionage in the early days of the Bolshevik Revolution? The Reds consolidated their power through terror while the West tried to strangle the regime in its cradle. The deranged Polish nobleman Felix Dzerzhinsky founded the bloody Cheka while the mysterious Sidney Reilly and the amateurish diplomat-spy Robert Bruce Lockhart opposed him with every intention of slaughtering the top Bolsheviks.

Reilly and Lockhart came so close to achieving their goal that, to this day, the Kremlin still believes in the global reach of the British secret services.

GEORGE ELIOT OF SCI-FI by Bruce Strauch (The Citadel)

Science Fiction in the fifties and early sixties was largely male-written with a woman here and there sneaking in “wearing a false moustache.” Via her agent, Ursula Le Guin submitted “Nine Lives” to Playboy; which, of course, was desperate for high-quality fiction to wrap around the naked babes so that, “taken as a whole,” the mag wasn’t obscenity. The story was submitted under U.K. Le Guin.

Upon acceptance, the agent admitted the truth to the fiction editor, who feared their readers would be frightened by a female author. So U.K. Le Guin became part of literary legend.

When asked to submit an author biography, Ursula rejected, “He is a housewife and the mother of three children” and opted instead for “It is commonly suspected that the writings of U.K. Le Guin are not actually written by U.K. Le Guin but by another person of the same name.”
