Collaborative Partnerships: Expanding the Vendor/Librarian Relationship by Ann Branton — From a technical services perspective, one librarian's collaborative partnerships with library book vendors can be applied to all areas of doing business with vendors.

And They Were There 65

Reports of Meetings by Sever Bordeianu — This completes our reports from the 2004 Charleston Conference. The entire Charleston Conference Proceedings has just been published by Greenwood/Libraries Unlimited.

BOOKSELLING AND VENDING

Little Red Herrings 68

Stop the Presses: Feet No Longer Needed; Hands Next to Go by Mark Herring — Mark finds the spate of articles about the digital tsunami puzzling. Keep this up and we'll all be working for Microsoft, or not at all.

Leaving the Books Behind 69

Job Mania by Mary Tinker Massey — As a recent graduate who is recently employed, Tinker comments on job descriptions, the job application process and the interview.

Lost in Austin 70

by Thomas W. Leonhardt — Tom continues to discuss his reading and review of independently-published books for ForeWord magazine. This time he discusses religious fiction. Which leads him to say: "There are a lot of good books being published outside of New York, just as there are a few not so good books coming from Gotham City."

Issues in Vendor/Library Relations 72

So What's Wrong with Opt-Out? by Peter Givler — When publishers objected, Google publicly announced an expansion of the "opt-out" option. Publishers can now opt-out their entire list if they wish to, although in order to do so they still have to notify Google title-by-title. Now, opted-out titles will not be digitized, will not be included in the Google database, and copies will not be given to the libraries. And there's more ...

Group Therapy 74

by Beth Bernhardt — The per title fee by subscription agents is a serious budgetary issue.
