Pricing Models for Electronic Resources: What's on the Menu?	1
by Tim Bucknall and Beth Bernhardt — In this issue of ATG, four experienced professionals help us make sense of today's lengthy menu of pricing options.

Electronic Resources Pricing: A Variety of Models	18
----------------------------------------------------------------	-----------

by Christine Fischer — Determining pricing for physical resources actually housed in the bricks and mortar facility is relatively simple. In contrast, libraries must select electronic resources that range from databases to online journals to eBooks, and these information tools are purchased using pricing models that tax every library with their variability.

Got a Simple and Innovative Pricing Model? You Can Keep It.	22

by Rick Anderson — When it comes to pricing, simplicity is not necessarily an unalloyed good. What ultimately matters is not the structure, or the way the price is arrived at, but the final price itself.

Duke University Press Implements New Pricing Model for the e-Duke Scholarly Collection	24
-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-----------

by Kimberly Steinle — In 2005 Duke University Press launched an electronic journals package with 29 titles. The Press used interim pricing for that initial year, and in 2006 implemented new pricing.

Own or Rent? A Survey of eBook Licensing Models	28
--------------------------------------------------------------	-----------

by Scott Rice — eBooks seem poised to take off and with the advent of exciting new technologies, eBooks may finally break into the big time.

Op Ed — Opinions and Editorials ...	32
--------------------------------------------	-----------

Back Talk	94

Janus Conference Key Challenges: Whacky and Non-totally Whacky Ideas by Tony Ferguson — The ideas associated with digitizing past and present materials, to preserve our printed legacy are all good goals/challenges.

ATG SPECIAL REPORTS

SUPERBOOK Research Project at UCL	38
------------------------------------------------	-----------

by Anthony Watkinson — We are about to witness a major paradigm shift in the use of books: electronic or "eBooks" are emerging as a major resource in the academic world.

A Leisure Cinema Collection	40
------------------------------------------	-----------

by Julie Flanders and Cynthia Gregory — Though this new leisure cinema collection fell outside the traditional educational role of the library, it was a need expressed by visitors to the library.

Homespun Cultural Artifacts: Collecting Quilts for Fun and Babies ...	42
------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-----------

by Kirstin Steele — Peg Bradshaw, Circulation Services Director at the Williamsburg Regional Library, has collected quilts for over 30 years.

Colliding Technologies	77

by Norman Desmarais — The next generation of DVD media — high definition or HD — has begun to ship and, guess what, there are two competing standards to deal with. Sound familiar?

Review Essay: Anthropology As Natural History	85

by Gene Waddell — Three expeditions had major influence on the development of anthropology. These expeditions are also among the most important examples of travel literature.

Predicting High-Circulating Titles for Public Libraries	93
----------------------------------------------------------------------	-----------

by Bob Molyneux — The Normative Data Project is a huge pool of potential discovery. It collects data on various aspects of U.S. public libraries.
