Yoga has become a program offering at many libraries: Public libraries often program free or low-cost yoga classes for their communities; academic libraries may offer yoga sessions to help ease stress during final exams. Some yoga practices are tailored to mothers and young children who enjoy learning poses called “Downward-Facing Dog,” “Eagle,” and “Frog.”

Yoga is an ancient spiritual discipline intended to bring harmony between mind and body. Modern yoga practice is rooted in ancient Indian practice [http://www.mea.gov.in/in-focus-article.htm?25096/Yoga+Its+-+Origin+History+and+Development], but recently, other sources have proposed its origins and history to be rooted in Africa [https://www.yogaskills.com/about-yirser-ra-hotep/], according to Yirser Ra Hotep [https://www.yogaskills.com/wp-content/uploads/2015/09/KemeticYogaArticle.pdf], founder of Kemetic Yoga [http://www.kemeticyoga.com/].

The word yoga comes from the Sanskrit root word “yuj,” meaning to join, to yoke, to unite. The “aim of Yoga is Self-realization, to overcome all kinds of sufferings leading to the state of liberation” (Moksha) or ‘freedom’ (Kaivalya). Living with freedom in all walks of life, health and harmony shall be the main objectives of Yoga practice” (Basavaraddi, 2012).

In American culture, the explosion of yoga studios and practices attests to its widespread acceptance in the West. As a series of poses that provides stretching and flexibility to those who practice it for its strengthening and relaxing effects, yoga is a tremendous boon to a healthy lifestyle. It is accessible to many with disabilities, via modified poses and props.

Recent medical reports have shown that gentle yoga practice may be as effective as physical therapy for low back pain, according to a report on NPR [http://www.npr.org/sections/health-shots/2017/06/20/533505211/study-finds-yoga-can-help-back-pain-but-keep-it-gentle-with-these-poses] of a study done at Boston Medical Center, and published in the Annals of Internal Medicine in 2017.

In an opinion piece by Arundhati Baitmangalkar, posted on the Seattle News website [http://seattleyoganews.com/yoga-in-india-yoga-in-america/], yoga is more accessible and commercial in America than in India. Teaching styles and the relationships between students and teachers differ from yoga practices in India, where a reverence for the teacher or “the ancient concept of Guru-shishya parampara (teacher-disciple traditions) is a strong part of the culture, both in and outside of yoga” (Baitmangalkar, 2014). In America, students may have their favorite teacher in a yoga studio, but the relationship is usually less formalized.

In the West, yoga has also become a billion-dollar industry (See the HuffPost blog article, “Yoga in America: Where Bowing to God is Not a Religion”: [http://www.huff...continued on page 82] site offers a chance to book yoga retreats from selection of more than 600 groups and locations. Locations as varied as Bali, Thailand, South Africa, Nepal, and Pennsylvania are listed. Prices for retreats vary greatly as well, with some retreats only advertised for less than $100 and others going for more than $3000. Think of this site as the Airbnb of yoga retreats.

Do Yoga with Me — https://www.doyogawithme.com/ — For those ready to begin yoga practice, this site provides online access to many types of yoga videos: beginner, intermediate, advanced, yoga challenges. Includes a blog, and most of the site's content is free, with a small subscription cost for other videos.

Exhale to Inhale — http://exhaletoinhale.org/ — This site was created to use yoga to support women who have experienced intimate partner violence and sexual assault. Although the resources are currently only available throughout New York City, the Hudson Valley, Connecticut, and Los Angeles; the founders hope to expand to other locations.

Kathmandu Yoga — https://kathmanduyoga.com/ — is more than a yoga site. This social enterprise produces limited edition yoga and meditation accessories ethically made by artisans living in Nepal. Through this site viewers can participate in free yoga challenges as well as purchase accessories to support. Additionally, the yogis at Kathmandu provide blogs and inspiration to support your yoga practice. One example of these blogs is a top 15 yoga website blog created to offer readers quality yoga sites.

Mind Body Solutions — http://www.mindbodysolutions.org/ — is a nonprofit organization founded by Matthew Sanford (http://www.matthewsanford.com/). Sanford was paralyzed from the chest down, yet continues to teach yoga and other healing techniques to those who have suffered trauma or disability. Mind Body Solutions is devoted to promoting healing for those who have experienced trauma, loss, or disability. Based in the Twin Cities area, Mind Body Solutions also provides yoga teacher training throughout the country.

Urban Family — http://www.urbanfamily.org/ — search this foundations site to learn and support initiatives, Heart of Yoga, and partnerships, such as Black Yoga Teachers Alliance, that use yoga to enhance the lives of families and communities. Initiatives include online sanghas (community meetings), partnerships with yoga teacher trainings and teacher trainings. A recent event was the Frii Spirit Gathering, held in July 2017, an interactive learning celebration that included local tribal leaders and internationally renowned yoga teachers.

Yoga.com — http://www.yoga.com/ — and on Facebook (www.facebook.com/yoga), with more than 680,000 followers. Membership-based site with articles, apps, details on yoga poses (asanas) and a large social media community.

Yoga Alliance — https://www.yogalliance.org/ — Yoga Alliance is internationally recognized for its credentialing of yoga instruction. There are three designations from Yoga Alliance: Registered Yoga Teachers, Registered Yoga Schools, and Yoga Alliance Continuing Education Providers. The initial yoga teacher certification is 200 hours of training and teaching experience that meet Yoga Alliance Registry Standards at a Yoga Alliance-registered yoga school. Yoga teachers promote their accredited standing as 200 RYT (registered yoga teacher) or for more advanced yoga teachers, 500 RYT, indicating training and teaching at the 500-hour level.

Yoga Calm — http://www.yogacalm.org/ — is yoga for kids and teens that goes beyond the usual yoga site. This site includes trainings, classes, workshops and blogs for adults who love/work with children and teens. Tips and techniques shared through the blog range from body based therapies for stress and trauma to how political rhetoric affects our kids. The site also includes course and certification options as well as international retreats. Members have access to an online yoga calm lesson plan library with over 800 lesson plans and a video library with over 70 training videos.

Yoga for Everyone — https://www.nytimes.com/guides/well/beginner-yoga — the New York Times has created a website to guide those unfamiliar with, or perhaps intimidated by recent media yoga hype, to learn more about yoga, its history and varied practices. This site is an excellent introduction and jumping-off point for those who are curious about exploring a personal yoga practice.

Yoga U Online — https://www.yogaonline.com/ — is a resource and subscription-based site that offers articles and practice videos based on their passionate belief about “making the healing benefits of yoga more widely known.” The site includes a Wellness Blog, Practice Channel, and Online courses.

YogaFit — https://www.yogafit.com/ — is a yoga fitness teacher training company that prepares health club and fitness facility instructors to teach yoga as exercise at the 200, 500, and 1,000 hour accredited Registered Yoga Teaching (RYT) levels. The training eliminates the traditional Sanskrit terms and incorporates other fitness moves in their training. YogaFit offers short workshops in various cities; some public libraries send their staff for training, then include yoga fitness in their programming.

Yogasteya — https://yogasteya.com/ — is not only the ideal site for the new yogi or yogini but it is very welcoming for all shapes, sizes and abilities. Viewers can watch varied level tutorials (gentle, energizing, powerful). Yoga-related blogs are provided along with a list of common yoga series.

From Roger Schonfeld on Facebook: “Today, I testified before Congress about the preservation of government publications. In my remarks, I emphasized that the Federal Depository Library Program should be better aligned with modern library best practices for preservation in both print and digital formats. The panel on which I testified (which also included Robin L. Dale!) begins at 21:30.”
