FEATURES

Things That Keep Us Awake at Night — Guest Editor, Alicia Wise

Things That Keep Us Awake At Night ... 1

by Alicia Wise — Channeling the awesome Karen Hunter who wrote of this twenty years ago, Alicia queried Elsevier's North American Advisory Board and the Charleston Conference Directors to determine themes that were keeping us all awake at night.

The Fake News Phenomenon 14

An Opportunity for the Library Community to Make a Splash? by Donald Barclay — The furor over fake news presents an opportunity for librarians to show leadership and to help people become more savvy users of information.

The Insufficiency of Facts..... 18

by T. Scott Plutchak — Facts matter, but they're insufficient. They don't compel belief. We leap from facts to the conclusions we want to be true.

New Metrics for a New Strategy 20

by Roger Schonfeld — As the contributions of a library shift, so should the metrics for evaluating its success.

Making Open Access / Open Data / Open Science A Reality 24

An International Overview by Gemma Hersch — Fortunately, in more recent years the ecosystem has moved past the rhetoric and begun to develop into a real market.

Sleepless Nights Imagining Blueprints and Cranes... .. 25

by Maggie Farrell — It is during the quiet of the night that worries appear as to if we can build the services that contribute to the education of our students, how we might construct a scaffold of research services, and how we will build on traditional services.

Op Ed — IMHBCO 28

Another Predatory Journal Sting: Why This One Is Different and Matters More by Rick Anderson — One of the great advantages of the current scholarly-communication ecosystem is the degree to which barriers to entry have been lowered.

Remembering Eric Moon 50

Mentor in Memoriam by Robbie Franklin

Back Talk 86

The 19th Fiesole Retreat (Or, Eating My Way Through Chocolate Shops) by Ann Okerson — Now 20 years old, The Fiesole Retreats aim to bring together publishers, librarians, booksellers, and other stakeholders from several continents, in order to review and discuss current topics in scholarship, new technologies, business models, and much more. After it was over, Ann toured (and sampled) chocolate shops!
