Bragg was born in 1817 in North Carolina and ranked high in the graduating class of 1837 at West Point. He served with distinction in both the Seminole War and the Mexican War. This first of two volumes originally published in 1969 covers the life of the controversial general and his role in the defeat of the Confederacy and is reprinted as the companion volume to Braxton Bragg and Confederate Defeat, Volume II.

Grady McWhiney is Lyndon Baines Johnson Professor of American History at Texas Christian University.

A balanced picture of Bragg's role in the Confederate defeat beginning where Volume I stops at Murfreesboro in 1863. Along with the military details, the author provides a full accounting of Bragg's fractious relationships with other members of the military, a critical factor in this period for the entire Confederate command. This biography of Bragg gives valuable insight into the workings of the Confederacy in the last two years of its struggle for independence.

Judith Lee Hallock is a teacher in Centereach, New York.

A survey of the American Indian communities still surviving in the Southeastern United States. This volume is the first comprehensive, scholarly work, providing coordinated descriptions of these southeastern Indian communities as they near the close of the 20th century.

J. Anthony Paredes is a Professor of Anthropology at Florida State University.

Most regard toleration as an unattractive fallback position of compromise and so tend to overlook it in favor of such active concepts as freedom, equality, and justice. The authors argue that toleration offers us the useful possibility of responding to a difficult situation with a degree of flexibility not possible with the dichotomous concepts of good-bad, right-wrong, ethical-unethical, Right-Left.
