Pay-Per-View: Alternative or a Necessity in Today’s Economy
by Beth Bernhardt — Did you know that back in 2002 at the Charleston Conference, Beth talked about UNC Greensboro being one of the first schools to set up pay-per-view to provide access to articles from unsubscribed journals?

Forcing the Moment to Its Crisis:
Thoughts on Pay-Per-View and the Perpetual Access Ideal
by Patrick L. Carr — Budget cuts are forcing librarians to make painful decisions, and, in this context, it seems sensible to explore all avenues for reducing e-resource costs without reducing access – including those that are at odds with the perpetual access ideal.

Getting Our Feet Wet: One Library’s Experience with Transactional Access by Ryan Weir and Ashley Ireland — In 2005, following years of passive-reallocation of one-time purchase funds to serial holdings funds, Murray State University Libraries was forced to dramatically cut its journal holdings.

Profiles Encouraged:

Ashley Ireland.......................... 10
by Martha Whitaker
George Machovec........................ 38
by Dennis Brunning
