November 2013

Taking Charge: Preserving Our Digital Heritage
Part I

Amy Kohrman
Stanford University, akohrman@stanford.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://docs.lib.purdue.edu/atg

Part of the Library and Information Science Commons

Recommended Citation
DOI: https://doi.org/10.7771/2380-176X.2484

This document has been made available through Purdue e-Pubs, a service of the Purdue University Libraries. Please contact epubs@purdue.edu for additional information.
This issue is the first of a two-part series on digital preservation. Six librarians and one publisher describe their experiences with digital preservation. Some have fashioned their own solutions. Some have entrusted others to safeguard their collections. Unifying them is the desire to ensure the survival of e-content for future generations. Because so many insightful essays about digital preservation were submitted, both the February and April issues of Against the Grain will be devoted to this important topic.

In full disclosure, I am the Marketing Director of LOCKSS and CLOCKSS, and many of the contributors participate in one or both of these preservation methods.

The articles we present speak to four fundamental principles in the area of digital preservation. First, stakeholders — publishers, libraries, states — must take charge of the preservation of their digital collections. Second, the misperception that digital preservation is costly and labor intensive, or that it is a luxury, must be overcome. Third, unlike print-based collections, access to and the integrity of digital works are much more vulnerable. Finally, these materials must be preserved not simply because they are important today, but because they constitute our scientific, historical, cultural, and economic heritage.

Inside this issue, you will hear from:
- Vic Elliott, Director, Scholarly Information Services and University Librarian, The Australian National University, a tireless champion of digital preservation, argues that libraries have lost much of their influence and power and describes how the CLOCKSS initiative offers them a chance to regain some of what they have lost.
- Glen Worthey, Head, Humanities Digital Information Service, Stanford University, details the kind of loss that is possible in an all-digital medium. Glen describes what happened recently at two online literary journals: The Absinthe Literary Review and Exquisite Corpse. Fortunately, these “born digital” humanities journals had made arrangements for preservation; had they not, their valuable content would have disappeared without a trace.
- Heather Staines, Global eProduct Manager at Springer Science + Business Media is committed to helping libraries preserve their collections. A frequent speaker at library conferences, Heather writes about trying to navigate the unchartered waters of eBook preservation and Springer’s diversified approach to meeting its digital preservation needs.
- Peter Burnhill, Director, EDINA Data Centre, University of Edinburgh, writes

If Rumors Were Horses

Lots continues to happen in our space.

The fantastic Tom McNally has been appointed Dean of Libraries at the University of South Carolina. Tom has served as interim dean of the University of South Carolina libraries since 2007. He joined the libraries nearly 19 years ago as university librarian for public services. “The library plays a key role in the process of teaching, learning and research,” McNally said. “We must continue to build and conserve our collections. We must work every day to develop services that keep pace with the technologies that our users are employing. We must remodel our libraries to reflect the changes in the ways our students learn and interact with one another. Each librarian we recruit must be a leader capable of creating initiatives and moving them into daily practice.” Tom earned a bachelor’s degree in education from Kent State University and a master’s in library science from the University of Washington. He was a librarian at Ohio State University, the University of Michigan and Loyola University in Chicago before joining the University of South Carolina’s library staff in 1991. McNally served as director of Thomas Cooper Library from 2003 until he was named interim dean of libraries in 2007, replacing Paul Willis, who retired. For more than 200 years, the University of South Carolina libraries have grown and matured from humble beginnings in Rutledge Hall on the historic Horseshoe. Today, the collections span eight buildings and include tens of thousands of journals: The Absinthe Literary Review and Exquisite Corpse. Fortunately, these “born digital” humanities journals had made arrangements for preservation; had they not, their valuable content would have disappeared without a trace.

What To Look For In This Issue:
- And They Were There — Reports from the 2008 Charleston Conference
- The Google Settlement: Boon, Boondoggle, or Mixed Blessing?…….69
- Papa Abel Remembers — The Birth of the Approval Plan…………………82
- Out of the Box……………………..92
- Open Access, the Turning Point, and Methadone……………………..94
- Interviews
  - Dennis Dillon & Rich Rosy……………………………50
  - Sameer Shari……………………………………………54
- Profiles Encouraged
  - Vic Elliott……………………………………….20
  - Glen Worthey……………………………………24
  - Heather Staines…………………………………30
  - Plus more…………………………inside promising new initiatives within the scholarly community." Ithaka is an independent not-for-profit organization dedicated to helping the academic community use digital technologies to advance scholarship and teaching and to reducing system-wide costs through collective action. It pursues this mission by managing innovative services that benefit higher education, including JSTOR, Portico, and NITLE, and by providing research and advice to the scholarly community through its research and strategic services groups.
http://www.ithaka.org

Just learned that Mark Herring (Director of Libraries, Winthrop University) has a new grandson. Malcolm Wieland Keneey was born 6 January, about 5:30 am. He weighed 7 lbs, 14 ounces. When baby sister Allene saw him (she’s 3) her mother asked her what she thought. “Can he go live with Maestro (Mark!) and Vía-Vía (Mark’s wife, Carol)?” she asked. Both her parents are graduates of USC MA public history and MLS programs, and Malcolm and Allene’s father works in the Carolinana.

Credo Reference has partnered with the Amigos Library Services to provide reference products to member libraries at a discount. Our Lady of the Lake University, in San Antonio, Texas was one of the first to take advantage of the agreement. “With libraries providing access to so many different databases, today’s researchers are inundated with choices. It can be overwhelming,” commented Judy Larson, Sueltenfuss Library director. “Credo simplifies the research experience, bringing together in just one interface, many cross-searchable, full-text resources …” www.credoreference.com www.amigos.org/

It was truly wonderful to hear from Celia Wagner <celiaw7@gmail.com> the other day on LinkedIn! You’ll remember Celia from when she worked at Academic Book Center in Portland and, later, Blackwell Book Services. Anyway, Celia tells me that she’s working on two non-fiction business books in her spare time and she also sent us a hilarious On the Road column for this issue, p.78. Celia used to write the Book Pricing Updates for ATG from v.1#1 (March, 1989) until v.11#4 (September, 1999). And we can’t forget On the Road which ran from v.5#2 (April 1993) to v.14#1 (February 2002) with various authors, Don Jaeger the most frequent.
http://www.against-the-grain.com/

Speaking of back issues of ATG, Jesse Holden (Coordinator of Technical Services, Millersville University, Pennsylvania) <jesse.holden@millersville.edu> is looking at a cross-section of the “archival discussions” around the launch of ATG, especially the pre-early-WWW (that’s worldwide web) years. What a great project. I am looking forward to Jesse’ observations.

And, speaking of ATG, you will notice that we have a You Gotta Go to School for “This?” from Jared Seay who wrote You Gotta Go to School for That? for many years – v.3#3 (June 1991) to v.13#4 (September 2001), see this issue, p.47. This one’s about Raves in libraries. There are many clips on YouTube of various library raves. Hmmm …

Heard from Albert Majors McClellon (President, Majors Books) that the Majors family is celebrating the 100th anniversary of the 1909 opening of their Grandad’s opening of the first medical bookstore in New Orleans. Y’all will remember that in 2004 when B&T acquired Major’s wholesale and library services business, the Majors family continued running the retail medical bookstore in Dallas. Congratulations to Al and the entire Majors’ family for this milestone! http://www.majorsbooks.com http://www.against-the-grain.com/

And forgot to say goodbye to the always humorous Ned Kraft who wrote Adventures in Librarianship from v.15#4 (September 2003) to v.20#4 (September 2008) for ATG! Ned says that he was burned out on humor which makes us very sad. Thanks to Ned for all the hilarious digs at ourselves that he gave us!

And we have some new columnists coming on board over the next few months. Am looking forward to contributions from the glamorous Xan Arch <xanadu@stanford.edu> who has already written several Biz of Acqs for us. Also, looking forward to some predictions about future developments from Michael Pelikan <mp10@psu.edu>.

What will future issues of ATG deal with? Well, the next two issues explore digital preservation and are guest edited by the efficient and thorough Amy Kohrman (Stanford University), our June issue will be guest edited by Irv Rockwood (Choice magazine) and will be on the peer review process, the September issue will be guest edited by Beth Bernhardt (UNC Greensboro) and there is much more to come! Hope that you have renewed your subscription!

And, speaking of the peer review process, this is from Liblicense (January 9, 2009) — Peer-Review Scandal Shakes French Geologists — Members of the prestigious Institute of the Physics of the Globe of Paris (IGP) are in hot water after it was discovered that they acted as editors for journal manuscripts submitted by their peers. The offending articles were published between 1992 and 2008 in Earth and Planetary Science Letters, a journal published by Elsevier. At issue largely is whether it is acceptable or not to publish articles in one’s own journal.

Speaking of Elsevier, I attended the Elsevier Digital Library Symposium during ALA in Denver. The theme was Next Gen Librarians: Who Are They & What Do They Want? This was an interactive session (led by Daviess Menefee) with a panel that included Jack Maness (University of Colorado, Denver), Denise Pan (Auraria Library), Refugio Ramirez, (UCLA), and Gary Strong (UCLA). All were library administrators except Refugio Ramirez who was an MLIS student. Much of the discussion focused on how future librarians are being trained in library school and on the lack of qualified “middle management” librarians to replace the baby boomer librarians as they are retiring. Both a challenge and an opportunity. There is DLS coverage in the Wake Forest University Z. Smith Reynolds Library’s Professional Development blog at blog.zsr.wfu.edu/pd/.

continued on page 20