Column Editor’s Note: Several years ago, as our musical group Watersprite began playing at an outdoor festival near Nashville, Tennessee, I could not help noticing several people in rather unique costumes wandering in the crowd. During our break, I approached them to find that they belonged to a subculture called “Steampunk,” which one member of the group called “a serious lifestyle choice.” Being fascinated with subcultures and alternative lifestyles since the 1970s, I explored the Steampunk phenomenon and discovered that this movement started as a genre of speculative science fiction that takes its inspiration from the outdated 19th-century steam powered machinery, as well as Edwardian and Victorian culture, and turned it into a literary vision of a post-apocalyptic world, where steam and the complex machinery it powered have returned to prominence in an alternate version of history. It is also a social reaction to modern mass production, anti-individualism that seeks to return to handcrafted, individually reengineered products that feature exposed gear work and attention to elaborate styling. — JM

This vision has inspired an entire movement in aesthetics, art, music, fashion, literature, cultural events, and movies that reflect an encompassing lifestyle which has spawned its own community. Though Steampunk as a term did not emerge into mainstream culture until the 1980s, some of its thematic roots go back to the 1920s with movies like Fritz Lang’s silent sci-fi masterpiece, “Metropolis,” and even to various 19th-century novels by Jules Verne and H.G. Wells. Other visual media expressions include 1960s television’s pseudo-western, “The Wild, Wild West” and films like the Japanese animation classic “Howl’s Moving Castle,” as well as movies like “Hellboy,” “Brazil,” and “The League of Extraordinary Gentlemen,” to name a few. All of these expressions elaborate the dark, often anachronistic, claustrophobic, yet romantic vision of Steampunk. In my travels, I located a local individual who is currently active in the Steampunk movement and known to be an authority. Even more special is the fact that she is professionally associated with our local public library. These are her recommended sites and annotations.

However, with no publisher contract to deal with, the author makes all the money and can retain all the rights.

Skocut then went on to discuss librarians’ concerns about discovering these hidden gems. Vendors should work with their customers to determine criteria and expectations for both library collection development goals and end-reader interests. One concern is that a title might be discovered too late, but as one public library director was quoted, “If the work is good, it’s never too late to promote it.” In order to develop regional and subject profiles, better metadata needs to be collected earlier. She also mentioned a product called IngramSpark that her company was making available to independent publishers and self-publishing authors. While academic libraries are developing self-publishing support programs for scholarly works, public libraries have been a bit slower to go in this direction. However, a good example of a project developed by a public library was described.

Williamsburg County Library in Virginia published a children’s book that helps “sell” the library and the proceeds go to the Friends of the Library. David Holley was the final presenter of this panel. She serves as the eBook Project Lead for the Massachusetts Library System. She discussed some of the challenges and opportunities presented when trying to put together a system-wide eBook collection. A particular challenge she mentioned was restrictive licensing that makes it difficult to obtain access to certain kinds of content.

The next panel was moderated by Mitchell Davis and included Bob Holley (Wayne State University), Eleanor Cook (East Carolina University), and Leslie Lee (ebrary), who discussed “Finding Balance in Humanities and Social Sciences Acquisition.” Bob Holley began the session by again reiterating the vast numbers of self-published titles that are being produced each year. Bob’s remarks focused on academic subject matter that had niche interest, was highly collectable and important but hard to find in mainstream sources. An example he gave was the memoirs of Vietnam veterans. He outlined the advantages and disadvantages of going the self-publishing route for these kinds of scholarly works. He agreed that libraries to this point have not been able to easily identify these kinds of materials for acquisition. Eleanor Cook built her comments on Bob’s and agreed that, generally, academic libraries have ignored self-published materials except within the purview of special and regional collections. Within that area, self-published works are quite common and sought after, since many genealogical materials are published in this fashion and they are a link to a number of regional collections. Another dilemma faced is when identifying faculty authors for local recognition. Many libraries hold such events and tend to recognize publications that are peer-reviewed and/or
